

BrokenLevenHeart

Game design document

Author: Uriel "Rosary" Gomez Document date: 5/2/2025

Introduction

The “BrokenLevenHeart” project is a card game with strong bases in the “High level” section similar to “Yu-Gi-Oh” or “Magic: The gathering”.

The bases of it focus on a narrative set in dark fantasy, Fatalism, the philosophy of war and perfectionism along with a much colder base similar to the “Grim dark” genre born with “Warhammer 40k”.

It is designed for an audience that escapes the problems of flexibility at the meta level that the most complex modern TCGs have along with greater accessibility added to equivalent mechanical depth. We combine this with flexible rules by giving the player the opportunity to change the rules with the game cards themselves.

It should be noted that this document is an improved and more complete version of an old version, although it is subject to changes in the final product.

Mechanics

In a card game the mechanical base is the most complex part and usually the one that takes the most time to develop, in this specific case the ideas presented here are the original concepts before the rules for the public.

Deck size

The deck is divided into two parts, a normal deck with a minimum of 45 cards and a maximum of 65, along with another one called “Stories” which contains 0 to 15 cards.

In each deck there can be 3 cards universally in the deck.

game board

The board is made up of different types of zones which each have a function.

First there is a line with 5 spaces for the requiem or “bow” cards and a sixth in the same row for the graveyard.

In a second row there are 5 spaces to put creatures, a sixth that functions as a cemetery.

In a separate area there are two extra areas, one larger for the currently active effects and another similar to the cemetery which functions as a “penance” area.

types of cards

In the game there are different types of cards with their own purpose which speed up the strategy, these will be mentioned below.

Requiem cards (formerly called magic cards)

Requiem cards are those that have their own effect and their only objective is to activate effects. These are divided into four types:

Axioms: Axioms are cards which can be activated at any time whose purpose is to help the player survive during the game.

penances: These cards allow the invocation of cards which require their use.

Imminent failures: It allows the summoning of “reconstructed” cards, giving it a negative condition which goes away after a certain number of turns.

Requiem: cards whose function can only be activated during the player's turn which function to speed up an already thought-out strategy or a specific type of archetype, some can say "continuous" by staying on the field and activating their effects once per turn.

“Arc” Cards

The function of Arc cards is to change the rules of the game.

They can add, remove or even modify the rules through the effects described in it.

Each player cannot activate more than two at a time and when activating a new one they must deactivate a rule already set by them.

Some can be negated under the effects of these cards if your opponent accepts the condition shown on it.

These are divided into two types:

Greater arch: They are those that alter the rules for a long time, some can stay on the field and activate their effects until they are negated.

Minor arc: They are arcs can be activated at any time

the creatures

Creatures are cards which function to be able to combat and have effects to speed up the strategy or improve the player's survival. These only have attack and can have a normal summoning method which consists of just placing them from your hand to your deck, some are placed in the legends deck as they have more complicated summoning conditions which require being in a separate deck to always have access to them.

Normal: They are in the normal deck and are those that can be summoned in a normal and special way. The idea of these is to function as both a barrier and a lever between the different cards.

Sacrificial (Previously called rituals): These are in the Tales deck, they ask you for a “penance” card along with some other cards of any type for their invocation, these being sent from the hand or field to the “penance” area.

Some of these cards can have “rite” effects, be added to the hand and activate said effect from the hand, this is marked as “anti-rite”.

Rebuilt: These are in the Tales deck and require an “imminent failure” card to be summoned, they are sent to the graveyard by said card and after time dictates the card with the consequence they are summoned to the field.

Disruptions: These are in the story deck and are cards that require you to have magic cards or creatures in your hand or field being sent to the graveyard in order to be summoned.

How the creatures fight

Creatures only have attack, the creature with the most attack is the one that wins and the one with the least is sent to its controller's graveyard.

If a creature has less attack than the one seeking to attack when they hit, it is destroyed.

player life

Each player starts with 2000 life points and can have a maximum of 8000.

Heal

The player can be healed by card effects but can also be healed if he has cards in his graveyard, once per turn he can send a creature card from his graveyard to his “penance” zone and heal the entire attack of that creature as life.

If you prefer to do this in the penance zone, the player can heal his life but the card is sent back to the deck.

How damage is received.

The player only takes damage from direct attacks.

How a game ends conventionally.

The game can end when one of the two players brings the opponent's life to 0.

Arcs and victory conditions

Arc cards can add victory conditions and even negate this conventional way, but if no card says the way or method to do it in its description, the game can only be won by the effect mentioned in the rule. 5.0.

The effects of the cards and their denial.

When cards are put on the field and their effect is used, some cards can avoid this, this is known as “negating an effect”.

Cards with negative effects, regardless of whether they are creatures, magic or bows, go directly to the graveyard.

about “sequences”

A sequence is when one card activates an effect and another responds. Each sequence corresponds to 3 chained effects, for example:

Sequence: Activate effect-Deny effect-Activate effect...

If the 3 chained effects are exceeded, a second sequence is created. Some cards may require being in a specific part of the sequence to create a new effect.

About the sacrifices of life

In the case of some cards, they will ask Sacrifice life, that is considered a special effect.

It is defined as a Sacrifice any action in which the card takes life from you to activate an effect as a form of payment, this being a mandatory action. This is a relevant statistic that the player must have on hand, as some cards required sacrificing certain amounts of life (for example, four times your maximum life).

The effects of Sacrifice can be altered by other cards, both Requiem and Bows to change their functioning, even in some cases turning them into healing or making the Sacrifices are not counted as such.

The cards require sacrificing life when committing this action, the effect It should count as a Life Sacrifice.

Start of game

At the beginning of the game both players draw 5 cards, starting from the second turn each player draws a card at the beginning of their turn.

When a shift begins, this must be notified and also at the end.

first turn

The player's turn can use his cards and build his strategy, the game cannot end in this turn and since it is the opening, the opponent cannot be attacked.

Shift of

On turn two the player can draw cards, attack the opponent's creatures with his own creatures but not end the game.

turn three onwards.

From this turn on, the game can end by any possible method while following the same structure.

Technical Clarification

In this project, the regulations have been updated, having a total of three versions, the first version known as "Game rule 0.5.0.0" created on 09/18/2024

https://docs.google.com/document/d/1KqtsvFGrcLxr_JsNBqegxHJoY0ToUi-y-FQEJtaU3-gQ/edit?tab=t.0

This being the most primitive version of the rules, these would eventually be rewritten for the understanding of a development team to be able to create more detailed card concepts, known as "Gamerule 1.0.0.0" and the subsequent addition of the rule for "Life Sacrifices", is being the version seen in this document.

Finally, the version for the public was born, which has solidified these concepts and is now a more accurate explanation.

<https://docs.google.com/document/d/1YNL2uykzVn0wpqGqYdnp7o4ReObzMDAYIwIINMLbyAk/edit?tab=t.0>

In this document the mechanics are presented as rules due to the way in which they were presented during their development time.

Narrative

We as players are the so-called “Crystal Cartographers”, a series of historical Archivists of the “Crystal Kingdom” belonging to “Cronostasis Reveria” with “BrokenLevenHeart” being actually the first of the two to be raised.

This allows us, as players, to have the records of each event become playable cards along with showing how people in the kingdom spent their time replicating files and making moments vivid.

At the same time, it seeks to explore, from the names of the cards, the line of actions that led to the events of “Chronostasis Reveria” and the eventual fall of the “Order of the Cartographer” but without giving it the enormous importance it has in the already mentioned project.

This corresponds to a part of the past and not the entire past, so it is possible to expand the card game continuously.

The story as such is divided into Acts, these are the following:

- Flame Shards
- Magnolia, The Kingdom of Ashes
- EldenDarkAgartha

The reason why we, as Cartographers, begin to record is due to our own work.

In the past, each entity that recorded time had a scroll with what was supposed to happen, but at some point these fell off, resulting in someone else reading it.

That someone decided to turn them into operas and thereby hide the knowledge for fear of reprisals.

We as players also visit the black desert or as they call it in the crystal kingdom "the formless void" in the form of more cards which have parts of what said place is like in the present.

The history of the void is that it happened after the arrival of the blood mage Arkhalis Emily Inkdeath to the crystal kingdom along with trying to hunt down what remains of Atanatos Devorix, this composing the cards of the entire crystal kingdom.

Each operates independently. (history)

Each opera is its own story, which happened a long time ago and in which we are not aware of what happened but when repeating some things changed drastically, depending on what the player does, it can end as it is supposed to end or with traces of the formless void.

“The Fragments of the Flames”

These are a series of causalities which led to what is called "The Kingdom of Chains" and the birth of the "Despia", humans whose hearts for some reason do not form or disappear and the "Kingdom of Crystals" offers them a deal, a debt that they will eventually know in exchange for a core of pure magic for a heart.

During this time, cities are formed, the first wars are formed, and the visions given by the scrolls to Morgana Everflame are generated.

This era is characterized by how a whole group of cities are created, how magic is discovered and most importantly...

Which is the world in which the story takes place.

about the world

Called by everyone “The Kingdom of Chains” it is known as a place with a huge dome, it lets the worthy people out by showing them the outside of said kingdom but the rest are trapped.

This place for some reason attracts and more easily allows wars and armed conflicts, often without a clear sense as if the area required conflict to be able to inhabit it.

“Magnolia, The Kingdom of Ashes”

When the time came, a city was created made in the ashes of what is now called “the world of a bygone era.”

It is made of solid ash bricks, it advanced a lot in technology, thanks to advances in magic they began to create their own modernity and return to what was that lost world.

The city presents structures similar to London but tucked into a huge cave which was taken over little by little.

Those people who mark this era are Despicable beings by nature, brilliant magicians in a young era, these capable of living for hundreds of years saw their beloved home fall into ruin due to the ambition of a few.

About Eudora Ariamis Eos and Mephisto Napoleon Eos.

The two brothers gave birth to the Eos family during this time, they became important beings on their own merits and great gifts as soldiers or intellectuals and even assassins.

They both grew up together living relatively well, Eudora was never the mentally healthier of the two, gifted with magic she destroyed her but at that time these signs were not understood correctly and she had to control it by her own strength.

Mephisto, for his part, already at that time had a gift for controlling madness and shortly after being an important leader he created his own order of magicians known as "Seekers of Madness", people whose gift is to use their own madness against anyone who decides to challenge them.

Both change a lot over the years and even become absolute opposites against their own nature.

The hunt for the crows

The main area through which politics in Magnolia takes place, Mephisto and Eudora both remained here, is in charge of managing all actions within it, both scientific and political.

These were normally peaceful and maintained a higher status as part of a world, at least until the fall of Magnolia due to the instability the years gave to the cave, leaving the city as ruins except for the Crow Hunt itself.

About Sarín Arokunomane Brokenglast Aleph

This was a cruelty lived from an intermediate point between two operas which in theory is one of the catastrophes that would occur but when these were revealed it completely changed its course being the extinction of the species with which said catastrophe would generate.

He was the long-time supporter of eudora and responsible for breaking the natural rules more than once.

a great magician and even better criminal, capable of anything for progress.

On Vursen Entropy.

A magician who, before the fall of "The World in a Bygone Era" managed to outwit the "Crystal Kingdom" by making his life part of a page in a key book for the world.

He is the one who replaces Sarin in the work of generating catastrophes.

"Elden Dark Agartha"

The story behind Elden Dark Agartha is the beginning of major cataclysms in the world, in which two stories are told.

The first and initial one is related to a conflict known as “the Agatha wars” due to the city of Agarthia being the main cause of them, wanting to take control of a central trade network for almost the entire world.

This quickly leads a city known as Eldenheaven to try to reach agreements with the government that initiated said conflict, in which it is successful, this culminates with the then daughter of the court Irelia Neeko Eos Von castilla being raised by the ruler of Agarthia at that time, Kayn Reforamar Black with his wife Mejida Aposis Black.

This culminates with the stories of the “symphony of revolution”, a point in which Kayn Black's tyranny after so many years leads to a revolution by both his family and his people for control of Agarthia and thus ending the war.

The second part is called “Cronalias”, a minor opera which was written long after the death of Morgana Everflame by the magician and scientist Theodor Aleph and tells how at some point magic is going to close at a specific point in the world known as the major chronalia and those who do so will change every fragment of the world's destiny to their will or anger towards the route of the Aleph theorem of magic.

These events trigger the death of Irelia's stepsister and also the beginning of the chain ended in the conflict that marked the world so much that even far from it there were still reprisals.

About Morgana Moebius Black Segfrine

Known by many as “Mother of Techno-arcane technology” she was a brilliant scientist and magician in life, although useless when using spells she masterfully understood how it works which led to her attempt to fuse mechanisms with it, this ended with the creation of the techno-arcane battery.

His sister, Ireliia, was the one who guided him on the difficult path of learning magic without the gift of using it, this led to his first interaction with Sarin Brokenglast and a deep friendship, which they shared as long as possible until the moment of Moebius' death.

Much of her life is marked by an obligation in the study of magic given by her father, Kayn Reform Black Sigfrine, who placed his two daughters in opposite branches of talent.

Despite everything, Morgana was always considered a peaceful person who rarely fought in a direct conflict during this opera, but her attempts to create weapons and even the beginning of her studies on artificial life and the creation of the biomechanical form, Taramas being extraordinarily similar to any spider, were recognized.

About Mejida Black's inheritance to Ireliia Black.

Mother and daughter with a really good relationship.

During Ireliia's childhood, she showed her talents for magic with a somewhat surprising speed, although blinded by it, she was really able to move as if everything always told her where she was, a measure that had to be that she supported her since Kayn herself had no interest in helping her now stepdaughter on the hard path she had ahead.

Mejida provided him with the magic books and locked him up after banning magic in Agarthia with the penalty of banishment, although he always turned a blind eye to his own family.

It is not until Ireliia's adulthood that she is banished and shortly after Mejida dies, Kayn is the one who gives his legacy to Ireliia along with the inheritance of three things.

A rapier known as "The End of Hope" a letter of motivation and the only sweet words he received from his stepfather.

About EldenHeaven

Elden is often called the city of lights, always bright, it is where in theory science and magic coexist as research combines to understand the functioning of the world around them.

Described as a large and beautiful city filled with research-only areas and home to several military, magical and technological academies, this is the epicenter of many present and future conflicts.

Its political system is based on its militia, divided into five castes which direct public order, external relations, the defense of state secrets, a service specialized in preventing approaching catastrophes and the Eldic Court Society for the security of the de facto government.

This ends up being the home of Ireliia and Morgana along with being the place where Violet Cattleya AfterMath is introduced, daughter of one of the leaders of Elden's political and military castes and a close friend of Ireliia.

At a certain point, weapons technology has advanced a lot with a goal that is never really clear until the beginning of the great catastrophes.

About the capital of magic and blood, Ytze.

Ytze is a city of magic and peaceful politics which is most recognizable for an oriental style added to its large population of blood mages.

This land is called the capital of Magic because the Orculian Federation of magicians settled here after the fall of their own city, thus creating their own magical society.

Despite this, Ytze remains its own government, once during Morgana Everflame's life there was an even larger city called Ytzlialis, it was so large that Ytze became its own town and was nothing more than the main entrance to said city.

Today the largest version is called a necropolis and Ytze remains the most important capital for any student of magic and even a land for the exiles of Agartha.

In direct war, they rarely attack civilians, so despite the bloody nature of their magicians, they have enough control to understand what they should kill.

These are the ones who finance the symphony of revolution, to be more specific Revery Inkdeath which even offers to go personally to the conflict.

About Revery Inkdeath and Castle Levenheart

Edna Inkdeath's Revery is a prodigious blood mage and mother of the "Sacrificial" branch of the same, sometimes called the "Blood Goddess" is nothing more than the prelude to something greater.

Despite everything, she is a truly ancient ruthlessness, she lived from the time when Sarin Brokenglast was born, in addition to actively participating against Entropia Vursen and Agartha.

Despite what is expected, it is also the reason why Ytze is known as the capital of magic and blood, for a long time it was called the "Empire of Roses" due to a rare type of sunset rose which was called "Thorn Tear" because the liquid it emanated is a kind of substitute for human and ruthless blood.

After what was called "The Day of Black Flowers" she took control of Ytze, turning it into a castle in which to keep records of the entire history of her own new town.

Levenheart Castle, a structure that stores inside a wonder of the world, a gem called "The Heart of the Damned", a huge gem with medieval-style lights which functioned as a headquarters that prevented assaults, due to the nature of the area, about three gardens were built, each with the idea of being the tomb of the Inkdeath family in the future.

About Yggdrasil Yggdrasil

Ygdraliuss ygdrasill is the seat of a very large clock similar to the taj mahal which functions as a control of the surrounding magic in order to create a place less prone to the effects of magic.

For a long time, human civilization was locked in Yggdrasil and thanks to a few ruthless people it was their bastion while they managed to figure out how to live better with the effects of magic.

Right here is the headquarters of the magic academy that is dedicated to regulating the use of magic, the Leirim Academy, the use of blood magic is prohibited at all costs and has always been against it, it must be located in Ygdrasill and not in Ytze.

Its peculiar name is due to its canals, due to how the chronicles work there was always a tree in them but in the entire world it did not rain except in Yggdrasill, they created canals and developed technologies to move through the canals in heavy rain in surprising ways until they surpassed Elden itself when it comes to technology.

About Orculia

Orculia, home of the beings magic never charged them anything, a city that ended in ruins and the original home of the Orculian federation of magicians.

This was governed solely and exclusively by Orculians and after whom they are extremely similar.

As time passed it fell into ruins after the Agathas wars and its importance was lost.

About the still unimplemented parts of the operas

Some cards also have parts added that have not yet been added to this document story-wise, but are explained from the void cards.

A good part of this is telling your story from the images and names on the cards.

Project art

The art of the project is one of the most complex and extensive parts of the project to explain, the idea is to use multiple types of art in different archetypes with two bases in mind.

Have something for every player and take into account the way each character expresses themselves and give them more life through more defined and firm art with their personality and ideas.

Each character sees the world differently so the idea is that a deck about a specific theme and character represents them as much as possible.

Conceptual Art Department

Conceptual art shows things made in the same line of art, although for the moment it can only be left in this same line.

The artist who helped me with the project and formed many ideas is Nekrosus, whose networks can be seen here:

Instagram: <https://www.instagram.com/afrosus/?hl=es>

This was contacted through discord: afrosus

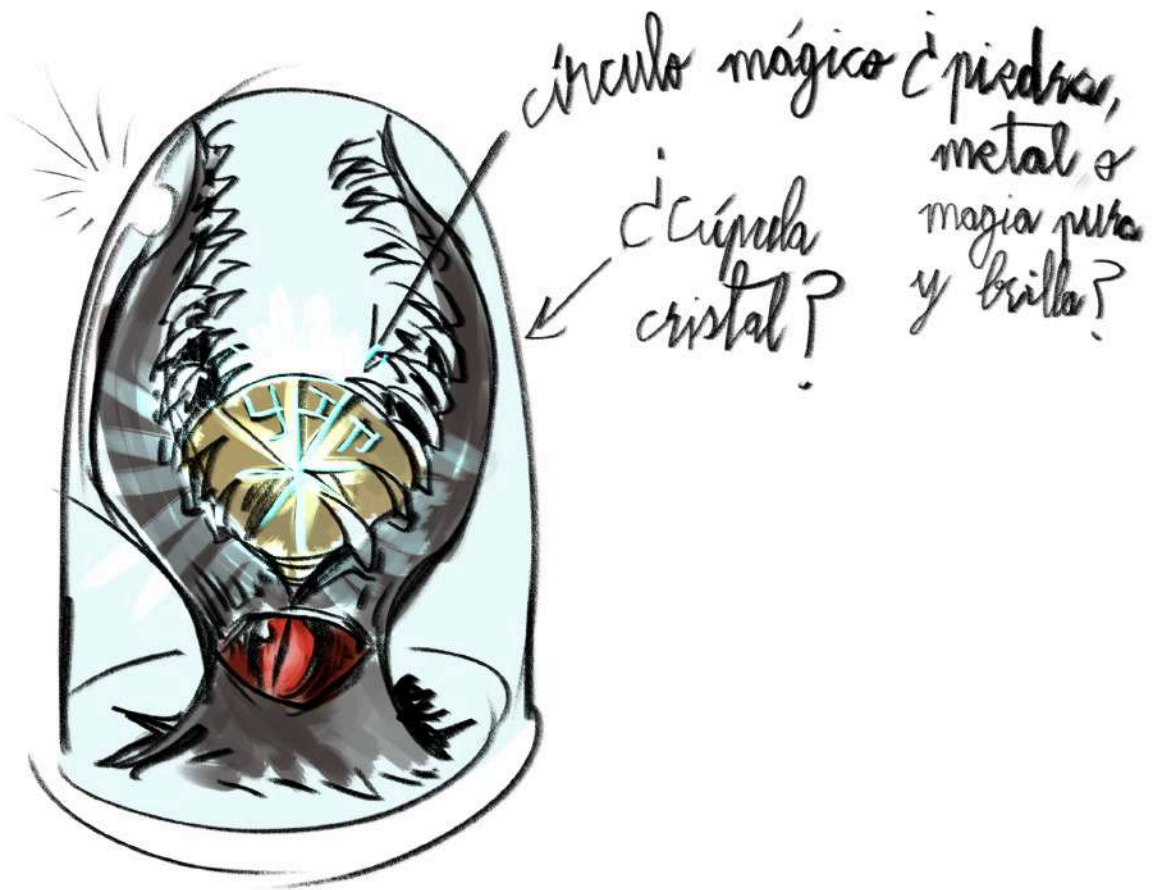

Use

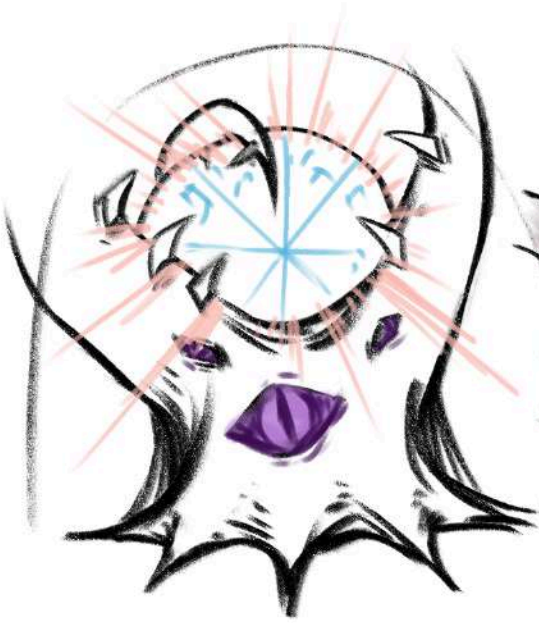

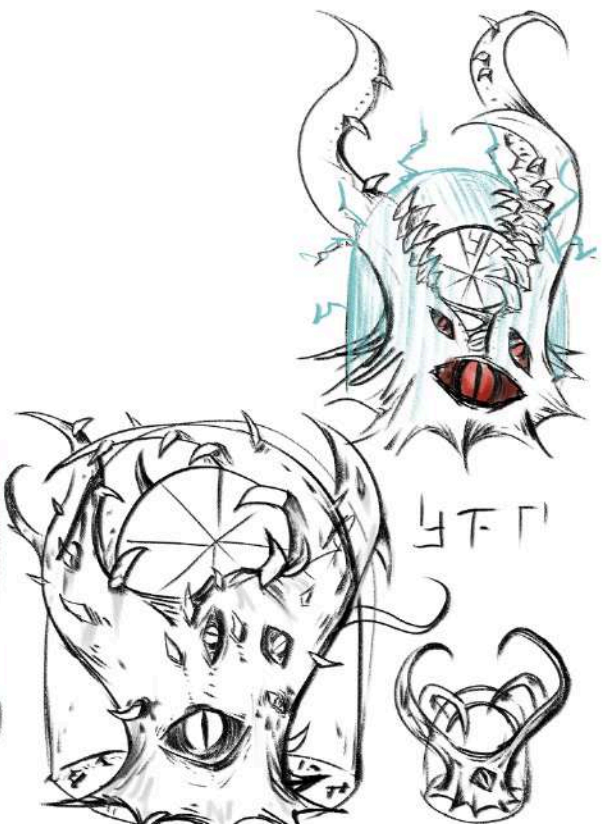

In “Cronostasis Reveria”, being a project that follows the same characters, it was decided to use extremely similar conceptual art for many things, not to mention the same ones on many occasions.

These are also somewhat older, coming from game rule 0.5 and gamerule 1.0.0.0 so they have things that are NO LONGER implemented in the game.

The ones that have things definitely no longer in the current game or name changes are marked “(Game rule 0.5)”.
